“To press the dandelion you’ll need a sheet of wax paper (about 20cm x 25cm). Fold it in half. Place the dandelion on the inside fold of the sheet of wax paper so that there is wax paper on both sides of the flower. Open a large, heavy book like a dictionary and place the wax paper containing the dandelion in the middle of the book. Close the book and place 2-3 heavy books on top of it. Within a week or so the flower should be pressed and dry. Open the book, remove it carefully and then mount it on a piece of sturdy paper”.

I found this today at the student center, somebody’s memo left on the lunch counter. I’d love to find this class room; table after table of “heavy” stacked books. To stand among these machines must be energizing. My hair would stand up I believe. It’s windy and cool today. Rode back to the studio; I must get a bicycle that fits me better.
